Dear Brandon,

A quick note to say "thanks" for the amazing work you did today. I'm floored (no pun intended) by how fantastic your system works! We moved into this home about six months ago. The first thing we did was call a "national chain" steam cleaner company to do the carpets.

After steam cleaning, the carpet "looked" pretty good, but it took two days to dry out. And that's when we realized, "looks" can be deceiving. Many of the spots came right back, as if the moisture gave the illusion it was clean. At the time, I figured "ok, we'll just have to live with it because these guys are the best."

Then two months ago, we had them come out again. I pointed out all those little gray spots I mentioned when you first came over. Hundreds of them, on our white carpet, from where my Grandson's sippy cup would leak various fruit juices. I honestly didn't think these would come up.

So here I am, four hours later. The carpet is dry, I'm walking on it in socks and my feet are not wet. I figured I'd test out how clean you really got the carpet.

I didn't tell you when you were here, but we have the top rated vacuum cleaner on the market today. It's a Sears Intelli-Clean model that is rated #1 by Consumer Reports. It has a sensor to detect dirt and as you vacuum, if you go over an area that is dirty, the sensor lights up, up to three bars to indicate severity, so that you can refocus on that area. Normally when we vacuum, it takes up to thirty minutes because the machine lives on the third orange bar, and we have to go over and over and over it, until it turns green.

I thought for sure, after the cleaning, some dirt would still be in the carpet, but I was wrong. I'm simply amazed! I ran this top rated vacuum on the living room and for about 98% of the entire cleaning, it was solid green (meaning no dirt). Only a handful of times, did the intelli-clean sensor go orange and even then, only the first orange bar. It went off after the second pass. This has never happened, since we've owned this unit. The carpet looked clean, but more importantly, the top rated vacuum on the market confirmed that it really was clean!

I'm sold. You have a customer for life! My carpet looks brand new. Your system removed things that the top national brand "steam cleaners" couldn't get up and it didn't cost any more than what they normally charge.
